It is more likely that the only effect on patient health is the difference in the number of unplanned readmissions, which will be small, and that this difference is statistically significant (5% of patients in each arm). The ideal way to conduct a patient-level RCT to compare interventions is by the use of a cluster RCT where patient recruitment is stratified by unit and randomisation is to the patient \[\[CR29]\]. However, the risks of this design are that patients within the same unit may have shared characteristics that influence their health and their treatment (spill-over effect). It also increases the number of patients in the study due to clustering of patients in units, and may limit the ability to generalise the results \[\[CR30]\]. We did not have sufficient numbers of units to stratify on unit, and therefore had to use a design that randomised units to their own intervention group. However, to mitigate against contamination between arms, we did perform a cluster-based propensity score analysis, which suggests that, whilst unit allocation may affect patient outcomes, the true difference between the

My wife Mary and I have been giving some thought to a trip to the End of the Trail portion of the California Trail in July 2016. If you haven't seen it, it's kind of like the Arizona Trail that starts in Prescott and ends in the southern portion of Nevada. There are a bunch of national parks in between Prescott and the border. You can see the profile of the trail here (and check out its website). Our plan is to drive from Prescott to the eastern end of the trail where we will camp on either the first or second night, then turn around and drive back. I believe that there are about 5 or 6 towns along the trail so that it would be feasible to stop in for a few nights to rest and perhaps shop. My plan is to rent a trailer, some kind of vehicle, and a flatbed trailer if possible. My question is – Do the National Parks allow vehicle use? I know that some of the parks are posted but I do not know of any that allow motor vehicle use. I am aware of the national monument at Petrified Forest National Park, but they have no motor vehicle use. There is only one alternate route that people are permitted to travel, it is less than half a mile and is not suitable for a camper. One more question – can we rent a camper, camper trailer, or even a tent trailer?
