The function of the application is to calculate acid-base titration curves and determine the acidity or basicity of a solution or a mixture by means of a titration process. The user is required to input data concerning the solutions or mixtures, starting (baseline) and end (final) pH values, the molarity of the titrating acid and/or base, the total volume of the solution, and the volume of titrating solution to be removed or added. After data has been inputted, the application is capable of determining the pKa or pKb of the solution or mixture, the molarity of titratable acid or base, and the total number of molecules of titratable acid or base. Calculate the degree of dissociation (pK) or protonation (pH) of one or more acids, bases, or solutions, as well as the corresponding pH and acid-base dissociation constants (Kb and Ka, respectively). An advanced mode allows you to decide which are the more important ionic species for each system, choosing between the activity, the concentration, or the "thermodynamic concentration". You can also calculate the solubility of a pure species or a mixture. The parameters required to obtain the above results are based on the total number of molecules of titratable acid or base, the total volume of the solution, and the initial and final pH values of the solution or mixture. pH calibration the calendar data tool will automatically prompt you to insert the date, and you will be asked to choose the day, month, and year of that particular date. data input form: 1. control panel: figure: 2. data input form: 3. select a problem: figure: 4. datadiscrete or continuous? figure: 5. data: figure: 6. select a case: figure: 7. select a titration curve: figure: 8. data: figure: 9. choose a titration curve: figure: 10. titration curve: figure: 11. select a single data point: figure: 12. select a line: figure: 13. select a line: figure: 14. add end point:
