Burkina Faso became the latest African nation to ban children from attending an annual music festival, after concerns were raised about the spread of coronavirus. The country's health minister, Boukary Gessye, said the move had been prompted by the "health and security risks" posed by the upcoming event, which is being billed as the biggest African music festival to date. "The world's biggest afrobeat festival will be held from 11-14 March," the minister told journalists. "We must inform the public that any children between the ages of 10 and 17 years will not be allowed to attend the event." He said he understood that there were many other issues to resolve and did not rule out the possibility of children being allowed to attend the event as adults. But, he added, the African elite festival is expected to see nearly 100,000 people attend the event, which is due to be staged at the Forêt d'Aval, a forest near the northern town of Djibo. The event, which had been billed as "Africa's biggest kwaito festival", was due to take place from 11-14 March. Performers had included DJ Khaled, 2 Chainz and Yung Gud, and were scheduled to be joined by almost 100 artists. The organisers issued a statement earlier this week, saying: "We do not want children to be exposed to the risk of contracting COVID-19, so no child will be admitted to the event." But Gessye said health concerns meant that children would not be allowed to attend, and no public admission would be possible. "The public health risks of this
