I've found that the average Photoshop user has a good working knowledge of it and can successfully use Photoshop on a wide variety of projects. At the same time, I've come across two types of Photoshop users who, even in the midst of Photoshop tutorials and evangelistic blog posts, really couldn't care less to know how to use Photoshop. And of course, one type of user wants to know how to use Photoshop, and the other does not know how to use Photoshop. In this guide, I will attempt to assist those who use Photoshop on a professional level—and hopefully show you the less obvious ways to utilize Photoshop that you may have been unaware of. Introduction Using Photoshop can be a little frustrating at times, especially when you discover a new way to do something you thought was already simple and well-known, and you've got to relearn that because someone came along and made it much simpler. After reading this tutorial, I hope you'll learn new and better ways to use Photoshop with your projects. The majority of Photoshop tools are accessible via the menu and/or keyboard shortcuts, so the majority of the examples that follow are based on the keyboard. Use the on-screen keyboard if you need to in order to navigate a menu or type. Also, remember that some of these shortcuts depend on what program is active at the moment, so they may or may not be the same across programs. Object Selection Basics Photoshop can be a very overwhelming program to learn. So first, let's make sure you know the basics of an object's selection—and that you know how to control that selection. When you're talking about a selection, you're talking about something that has been cut out of the rest of the image and is currently highlighted in white and contrasted in black. In the standard, default Layers palette, a selection is highlighted blue, with a white box outline. If the selection is active, click on it and the selection will change to red with a white box outline. You can either have no selections at all or several objects selected in your image. For this tutorial, I'll use one selection and then click the desired layer to make the selection you see in the next few steps. A layer's selection can be made by clicking anywhere on the layer and holding down the Shift or Ctrl keys. In the Layers palette, the bottom of the selection tool is dark blue. If

One reason so many models are sold is that they are all unique in one way or another. On the surface, if you were to simply look at the prices, it seems to be a cut-and-dry decision. The Cadillac XT5 is roughly $8k more expensive than the Ford Fusion. Not only are the small differences in exterior design and engine specs obvious, but there are also a slew of luxury features that make the XT5 feel more expensive than it really is. Although the XT5 and the Fusion come in two basic trim levels, there are also differentials in every category. The Titanium gets the top engine and best options, while the EcoBoost is where you want to be if you're looking for thrifty fuel use. A Premium trim is also included in the line up of the Fusion. The biggest difference is price. The XT5 has a base price that is $2,200 more expensive than the comparable Fusion. Both the Fusion and the XT5 have the same three-cylinder engine. The 1.8L, which has 173 hp and 168 lb-ft of torque, is mated to a six-speed automatic transmission with Sport Shift mode. All powertrains are mated to a standard rear-wheel drive. While no one would call the Cadillac XT5 the most sporty-looking of the C-Class family, it is a beast of an SUV. The EcoBoost engine, which comes standard, is a potent force behind the small crossover. It pumps out 295

You are here July and August are prime times to carpool to produce more energy while sharing gas dollars among its many members As populations continue to expand throughout the United States, carpooling across the country has become a viable option to commuting alone. In a poll conducted in 2008 by the National Household Travel Survey (NHTS) for the U.S. Department of Transportation, 93 percent of Americans surveyed said they carpool to some degree. The U.S. Census Bureau estimates that in the United States, 35 percent of all trips are taken by an automobile. If we use that figure as a measure of transportation utilization, then we can assume that approximately 88 billion trips are taken each year in the U.S. by car. Further, if we use the census data on household vehicle ownership, we can assume that a typical household drives four cars. Based on this, if we can reduce the number of trips taken by an average car and reduce the amount of fuel used per trip by one gallon, we can assume that the carpooling reduces overall fuel use by around 4 billion gallons. This equates to approximately four billion fewer gallons of gasoline needed in the U.S. annually to fuel cars. The number of carpooling trips taken in the United States amounts to approximately 180 million trips each year. If we assume a trip of 20 miles one-way from home to work, then using a round figure of 30 miles per carpool, we can assume that each carpool consists of approximately six people (five members and the driver). Based on this, one car could provide transportation for approximately 18,000 carpool trips per year. Are you ready for July and August? You are on track to improve your carbon footprint and reduce your energy needs this summer by making an effort to carpool to work, school, vacation and sporting events throughout these two months. There are actually two benefits to carpooling: In terms of reducing your carbon footprint by reducing your emissions, carpooling is by far the most efficient way to use vehicle trips. Therefore, when you carpool, you are effectively using two vehicles on a single trip instead of having to acquire and operate two vehicles. Carpooling across the country, especially during the summer, provides a boost to the economy by creating additional transportation demand. By carpooling to work, you can use one of these two benefits in July and August, and it will help save you money
