O projeto compila corretamente. Para testar eu tenho que ir no meu projeto, na estrutura de pastas onde fica o bin e o obj. No entanto eu estou com dificuldades no que me falta para rodar algo fora do projeto. Como ao invés de ir no meu projeto e rodar: mvn install -U -Dmaven.test.skip=true -Pdev já faço mvn clean install -U -Ddev A: Você pode usar um arquivo de configuração chamado settings.xml, que é específico para cada projeto. O arquivo pode ser pré-carregado usando a opção -P no comando mvn e configurado como a seguir:

a time factor. We live in an era when neo-pagans have accepted the simple truth; in the past, they generally blamed science for what they called sin. But they've understood that religious lies are worth little, that truth is powerful, and they've learned to depend on science for answers to their age-old questions. Thus, a religion that once depended on faith is now based on books, or primary sources, or juried beliefs accepted after extensive discussion. All morality is subjective: "My way or the highway." The time needed to manifest truth without faith takes less than one human lifetime. It is a boast that has always been claimed for science. On the other hand, the competitive space of mass fantasy, while ridden by little words and hyper-morality, depends on vanity and deceit, and it often believes in fables and simplicities. There are shades of science-fantasy and fantasy-science. Real science is optimistic. The goal is improvement, through comprehension. Sometimes, in a limited sense, progress can be seen in a society. People's expectations are raised, wisdom is acquired, and the world is a simpler place. The author who wrote the following, on the other hand, aimed at carrying that pessimism to its extreme. He knew that society might be poor. He gave no shit about the world.

----- The people who created the famous calculation for habitable planets were mathematicians. They were making a family projection based on the understanding that a certain combination of chemical elements is necessary for the development of living beings. And they observed that they needed a certain number, let's call it ten billion, of habitable planets to make a galaxy of a hundred billion habitable worlds. It is not complicated math, nor simple astronomy. It is finding out the relationship that may exist between the surface chemistry of planets and the amount of physics in a celestial body. Scientists, sadly, admit that they got confused with pseudoscience, particularly with spiritualism and magic because the time needed to travel vast distances is not measured in billions of years, as Plato said, but in thousands of years. The Mexican historian López de Gómara once made a conjecture that a person could travel to the Sun in three steps. But the Sun is so far
