10-year prospective study. To evaluate the clinical and radiographic outcomes of osteochondral lesions of the talus treated by arthroscopy in children. Case series; Level of evidence, 4. Forty-two consecutive cases of osteochondral lesions of the talus treated by arthroscopy from September 1994 through December 2004 were reviewed. Patients' charts were reviewed for demographics, lesion locations, preoperative talar tilt or pronation, preoperative Hawkins dorsal and palmar arch assessment, and postoperative treatment. The median follow-up period was 9.5 years (range, 3-12.1 years). Mean age at surgery was 10.5 years (range, 5.4-15.7 years). Patients had a mean number of 5.2 years (range, 1.8-11 years) of symptomatic disease. According to modified Robert and Hawkins classification, 25 patients had type 2 lesions, 14 had type 3 lesions, 3 had type 4 lesions, and 2 had type 1 lesions. Postoperative outcome was determined by Cincinnati knee and ankle scoring systems, visual analog scale scores for pain, and range of motion measurements. Twenty-three patients underwent autografts, 19 underwent allografts, and 10 had no graft. The Occ13bf012
