The present invention relates to a vehicle driven by electric power supplied from a battery. In recent years, a vehicle is mounted with various types of systems that perform control on vehicle driving, charging/discharging of a battery, or storage of electric power, in addition to an engine mounted in a conventional vehicle. The configuration of these systems is started from a concept of a hybrid vehicle driven by two or more kinds of power sources, i.e., the engine and the motor. The hybrid vehicle comprises a storage battery for storing electric power that is supplied from an electric motor, and an engine which can be driven by the output of the storage battery, and supplies driving force to drive wheels. The hybrid vehicle can travel only by the electric motor while electric power is supplied from the storage battery, or by the engine together with the electric motor when the supply of electric power from the storage battery is stopped, thereby reducing the exhaust amount of carbon dioxide. A vehicle equipped with a drive assist system (DAS) for a vehicle has been recently widely known. The DAS is configured to assist or support a driver, and the DAS includes a power steering system for assisting or supporting a steering operation. The power steering system comprises a motor driving a motor shaft to control a steering angle, and a controller for controlling the motor. When the controller detects that the steering wheel has been operated, the controller controls the motor to assist or support the steering operation. The DAS also includes an electrically powered sliding door that can be slidably opened and closed for opening and closing of a vehicle door (refer to Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (KOKAI) No. 2000-230238, for example). Furthermore, Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (KOKAI) No. 2002-175331 discloses a vehicle having: a steering control device for controlling a steering angle based on a steering wheel operation performed by a driver, e79caf774b

To investigate the delivery of a superantigen within attenuated Salmonella enterica serovar Typhi (S. typhi) we generated a Salmonella-based live vaccine expressing the fusion protein pVIII-PR8-SW1, which consists of hemagglutinin (PR8) and nucleoprotein (NP) of influenza virus fused to the streptococcal superantigen pyrogenic exotoxin (SW1). Vaccine strains expressed PR8 and/or NP sequences under the control of the individual RfbE promoter and RfbE-dependent promoters. Immunization of mice with the Salmonella vaccine strains induced PR8- and NP-specific serum antibodies as well as T cell proliferative responses. Upon active challenge with influenza virus, mice immunized with Salmonella expressing PR8 and/or NP survived significantly longer than the mock-immunized animals, and a significantly delayed influenza virus replication was detected in the immunized mice. Thus, we demonstrate that live Salmonella have the potential to act as a live vaccine vector for the delivery of a superantigen. Genealogy of the Cohen family This article summarizes the ancestry of the Cohen family of Ireland, their main claims and some of their descendants. It was written in the year 2002 by Séamus and Cara Cooney.
