Even with the challenges of being in the health care sector, there are several things a physician can do to improve his or her positive affect. During a recent interview with HealthTalk, one of the questions posed was about how could I improve my overall affect. As I looked to the answer, I was struck by a couple of them. First of all, I could use a source of reassurance. As an internist, I interact with the public every day. I have to speak to patients about everything from what meds to take to their frequent fears. Since stress is the enemy when it comes to your health and well being, I've learned to reassure my patients in a way that feels natural and reinforces that I'm there for them. I like to be the doctor that they can go to if they have questions. Even if the question about how I can improve my affect, it's on a bit more personal level. I'm at risk of being too serious or never having a moment to have fun. Knowing what makes me happy, keeps me happy. For me, it is exercising. And, I have a fourth part that I've been working on. In my last two years of medical school, I did a little too much studying and never stopped to think about what I wanted to do with my life. I've been pondering how I could use what I learned in medical school to be the best you can be. Maybe, you want to be a better doctor? I'm happy to support you in that. But, if it's something bigger for you, then you

.For all of the above, we thank you for your participation in the Open Science and Open. Science movement. Additionally, I'd like to add that he worked on the theoretical foundations of developmental biology, and got a lot of citations on that topic. In terms of how your citation fits in the review, he's mentioned that you are "combining two theories" in your answer, chara, allergenic receptors and MAP kinase pathways. which you cited from the article: Joundi and colleagues investigated the role of the seven seven allergenic receptors in Drosophila melanogaster. Surprisingly, a small number of seven-seven mutants exhibited phenotypes distinct from the pleiotropic phenotypes of mutants in the Toll and Immune deficiency pathway. For example, larvae mutant for seven-seven had defective hindgut, muscle and heart development. In addition, all seven-seven mutants did not show overt neuronal defects at any stage during embryogenesis and pupal development. Mutant imagoes lacked bristles on their thorax, legs and wings. which he cited back from his thesis: In our experiments, we found that the EGFR pathway is required for the dorsal compartment to develop and organize normally in the embryo. We further investigated the role of the seven-seven homologue, dSET1, and found that it is required for dorsal compartments to develop on the ventral side by default via an EGFR-dependent alternative pathway and that the seven-seven homologue may play a role in maintaining dorsal compartments over alternative ventral domains that may develop ventral to these compartments. Hopefully this will give you an idea of his contribution. And even though he doesn't work on the same branch of biology, that's still a huge overlap in knowledge and learning. His work is also not that old, which would mean that it was well recognized during the time of his work and there was significant research interest in developmental biology.
