In the past decade, ultrasensitive methodologies have been developed to quantitatively detect signal molecules in living organisms, including the highly sensitive and quantitative cytofluorimetric techniques that combine flow cytometry and fluorescence-activated cell sorting, and the highly sensitive and quantitative fluorescence techniques based on confocal microscopy, fluorescence correlation spectroscopy, total internal reflection fluorescence microscopy, and fluorescence recovery after photobleaching. In the future, the combination of molecular biology, biochemistry, and molecular and cell biology might allow the detection and the local measurement of free signal molecules, at the single cell level, to be integrated in the developmental and physiologic processes of the living organism. Welcome to 4ds(tm) - The official PiPhone blog. - mtgx ===== moe Looking forward to try this! Except, my throat got really dry watching the video ;) ~~~ trebor It's hard to tell if you've actually tried it, but the site has a crazy wide viewport. Unless you're in a pinch with only a 1024x768 resolution, I'd say it's not usable. ~~~ khafra Doesn't look like the HN reposts are moderated, so I'll just post my comment: I don't have an iPad, but I can't imagine needing a less cramped screen than the one the PiPhone offers. ~~~ trebor I agree, and perhaps the `_approach_` will appeal to people who need larger screens. My point was that
