I used to read a science fiction novel many years ago about a future world that was being driven into a kind of theocracy. It had a main character that was a Martian. A: Sounds like the Mars Trilogy (by Kim Stanley Robinson) The Mars Trilogy is a trilogy of science fiction novels based on ideas originally proposed by Jack Williamson in his 1941 novel The Legion of Space, which were also the basis for the 1968 movie starring Brandon deWilde and Edmond O'Brien. The third novel, Red Mars, was published in 2015. The series begins in the 2370s, with the solar system under the rule of a theocracy, styled on the Roman Empire. The Martian Union as the "Solaran Empire" is based on Mars, although the heavy differences in technology and lifestyle mean that most of the Solarans who live on other planets see themselves as very alien. There is an interstellar war between the Mars Union and the Unified Earth Government. The protagonist is a young Martian who joins the military on Earth. There is a political alliance between the UEG and the Solaren Empire, but the UEG is really an all-encompassing political organization with several levels of control. Tissue response to poly-e-caprolactone/cobalt-chromium biocompatible implant: a comparative study in rabbit muscle and bone. Recently, poly-e-caprolactone/cobalt-chromium (PCL/CoCr) has been proposed as a biocompatible implant material in several clinical applications, especially as vascular implants. The purpose of this study is to investigate the tissue response to PCL/CoCr implants in muscle and bone,
