The game places players on a team and has in-depth dialogue and cut scenes with other characters who will occasionally give you quests to complete. The style of this game is very similar to many RPGs and you will be in possession of a lot of items and equipment to get better at the game. Inazuma Eleven: Great Road of Heroes is also a RPG that tasks its player with taking the title of first-year student of school number one as you make your way through the story. As you do this, you will be travelling around and interacting with the people of Ejjelland. A game that's fundamentally similar in scope to the 2006 game Inazuma Eleven 3: Proving Grounds, a series that saw its first game on the Game Boy Advance in 2001. I think it would be fair to say that the series has caught on, and the most recent game made use of the incredible design skills that the company is known for. The amount of music and atmosphere in this game was absolutely stunning and I was so excited to see it made its appearance on the 3DS. Talking to my friend about it, I found out that the atmosphere of the game can be linked to the anime "Inazuma Eleven" and some of the characters are even the same and it made me so happy. The mechanics of the game are similar to many RPGs. You are given tons of equipment and weapons to aid you in traversing the game's many different areas. Some of these areas are set in the present and others are set in the future. You can collect gems and crystals as you progress through the game and these can then be used to unlock other items, upgrades and weapons. New weapons, items and characters will become available as you progress through the game's story. You will travel around and talk to other characters and explore different areas of the town to find more information about the story. You will also talk to your classmates, to your parents and to others who may possess a hint or two about the game's story. 5ec8ef588b
