International data suggests that a significant portion of students and staff use and misuse the Internet on a regular basis. Many online resources and the Internet itself are being used in ways that place them at risk of abuse. Abuse by students and staff is exacerbated by the lack of appropriate education and training regarding Internet safety and security. In this module, students engage in a research project examining student use of the Internet, and the attitudes of Internet users towards the use of online information. Students will gather background information on a given topic, and carry out a literature review, interview and online questionnaire in order to understand user attitudes towards the use of the Internet. Students will be encouraged to seek feedback from peers and teachers in order to achieve an in-depth understanding of their own attitudes towards the Internet. This module will also introduce students to ethical issues surrounding the use of the Internet. Students will explore examples of how they are currently using the Internet ethically, and how this affects the way that they use the Internet. Students will be encouraged to raise awareness of ethical issues in their own behaviours, and in the way in which they use the Internet. Students will also be encouraged to share their findings with their classmates, and reflect upon the implications of their research for future use of the Internet.
